Advocacy Across the Lifespan: A Workshop Series for Parents

Parents of children with disabilities need accurate and up-to-date information in order to navigate New Jersey's service systems and to advocate for their child. ASAH is proud to again partner with the attorneys of Hinkle, Fingles, Prior & Fischer to present a series of workshops designed to help parents understand important challenges they will face as their child ages from the school years into adult life. Each event, hosted by an ASAH member private school, is free and open to the public. Q&A will follow.

For more than 40 years, ASAH has been representing the needs and interests of New Jersey's private special education community. Our member schools – more than 150 state-approved private schools – serve roughly 11,000 infants, toddlers, children, teens, and young adults in special education, at no cost to parents. Parent workshops are offered as part of our mission to support families with a son or daughter with disabilities.
